

Consultancy

Industrial organisations face a myriad of legislation geared to protect people, environment, assets and reputation. Your emergency plan should include every aspect of Emergency Preparedness. The process for ensuring that all hazards are addressed should include:

anticipation; assessment; prevention; preparation; response; recovery

Relevant personnel should be trained to respond and site specific scenarios need to be tested regularly, helping to build confidence and competence whilst meeting regulatory compliance.

There is also the need to ensure that your site has the correct technical capabilities to deal with emergency situations – can your hydrants cope during an emergency?

Industrial fire safety management is essential to help you understand the suitability and accessibility of equipment required. Conducting fire risk assessments (a statutory obligation under the Regulatory Reform (Fire Safety) order 2005) will help you prepare for site specific scenarios.

Steps taken to ensure safety of operation should also address the site's security measures. Today's economic climate and the concern about potential increase in criminal activity not forgetting terrorism and sabotage, necessitates increased attention to the physical security of facilities and relevant procedures.

So how can we help you?

Sembcorp UK Protection group's consultants have decades of operational experience in Emergency Preparedness and work with clients from a variety of industrial sectors such as pharmaceutical; chemical; petrochemical; nuclear; food industry and many more.

By conducting an independent, impartial audit for your organisation they will be able to identify areas for improvement which may typically include:

- Reviewing existing emergency plans
- Assessing staff resource, capabilities and training needs
- Identification of site specific fire safety risks
- Fire pre-planning – consideration of fire management strategies
- Evaluation of current security arrangements including systems and procedures
- Implementation of Business Continuity Management

Our primary aim is to provide cost effective, comprehensive emergency management solutions to help you protect your business and safeguard your reputation in the long term.
