

Emergency Response

Global incidents regularly illustrate significant damage that can be caused to critical assets during an emergency? Post incident key learning in the majority of cases reveals the need to 'be prepared'.

Having a state of permanent readiness requires the ability to respond operationally. For any industrial organisation, this not only has a resource impact but will also incur a financial burden.

Operational responders need to be competent and confident to deal with all types of emergency situations. Then there is the need to have the relevant 'armoury' to be able to tackle such incidents.

So how can we help?

Sembcorp Protection's Emergency Response team have years of practical experience protecting £14 billion of assets in one of the UK's largest chemical hubs. At its disposal is the latest cutting-edge fire fighting equipment designed for high-risk environments including two world-class E-One fire appliances; bespoke industrial fire trucks capable of delivering 22,701 litres a minute of foam or water and four triple-agent appliances. The business also holds one of the UK's largest industrial stocks of Angus Tridol AFFF foam concentrate. In addition, all appliances have 'Hydro-Chem' ability allowing the application of a combined media of water/foam and powder, particularly effective for three dimensional fires.

All operational personnel are rigorously trained in all aspects of fire fighting techniques, medical emergencies and security related incidents requiring a carefully structured approach. In addition to holding the Joint Oil Industry Fire Forum (JOIFF) training certification, an accredited system of assessment and verification, the Group has recently set new industry training related standards. This has been done through achieving United Kingdom Fire and Rescue Sector National Occupational Standards (NVQs) level 3 qualifications which include the ability to assess and verify to these standards.

Over the years the business has been recognised through various awards which has included Cleveland Fire Brigade's 2008 Commercial and Industrial Safety Award and more recently the Chemical Industry Association's prestigious Professional Engineering and Supplier Award.

By outsourcing your emergency response services to Sembcorp Protection, you will have the peace of mind knowing that people, property and environment are protected around-the-clock by one of Europe's premier emergency response providers.
